RECOUNT OF COUNCIL VOTE MAY BE ASKED FOR LEWIS J. HEWITT

Citizens Municipal League to Take Up Defeat of One of Its Candidates for Office by James A. Watson

MISS CURTIS WINS

Boston School Committee to Have Woman Member Walter L. Collins and John J. Attridge Successful

Executive members of the Citizens Municipal League, several of whom are said to favor a recount in behalf of Lewis J. Hewitt, who was defeated by James A. Watson for the city council by 848 votes, will meet this afternoon to decide the question.

To activity of women voters at the polls yesterday is accredited the election of Miss Frances G. Curtis, the Public School Association's candidate for the school board, over Isaac Harris, backed by Mayor Fitzgerald and the Democratic city committee. Miss Curtis is the first woman to sit on the board since 1905. John J. Attridge and Walter L. Collins. indorsed by the Citizens Municipal League, were reelected.

Less than 50,000 voted yesterday. The eight-hour day act was accepted by a tremendous majority, and the policy of license won again.

Miss Curtis carried 13 of the 26 wards downtown wards the Democrats maintained their strength but the vote was fairly even in South Boston and outlying

Mr. Watson carried 16 out of the 26 wards and while he had not previously been pledged the support of the Demo-cratic machine, his election was brought about by the support of strong Democratic wards, such as 3, 8, 17, 18 and 19. Ward 18 gave him the biggest plurality. Only two wards went for no-license

Acceptance of the eight-hour act for city employees brings no change to the city employees of Boston, who have been working on an eight-hour basis since 1899. At that time the act was accepted in the form of a referendum, but owing to changes in legislation at the State House its validity has since been questioned. It was placed on the ballot this year at the instigation of labor unions as a protective measure, the claim having been made that the acceptance of the act was open to repeal by statutes on the books.

Efforts to reduce or remove the "very nominal protective duties" from the shoe and leather industry; the question of increase of foreign trade; importance to the industry of the South American tour planned by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and the labor problem were referred to in the annual address of the retiring president of the New England Shoe & Leather Association, Charles C. AMERICAN SUGAR COMPANY INDORSES

WASHINGTON-Edward F. But, senator from Massachusetts to succeed the company went on record as being in of course, even Congress, itself cannot favor of a reduced tariff on sugar.

A moderate reduction, it was stated, would accrue to the benefit of the consumer and would neither increase foreign values on raw material nor increase the refiners margin of profit.

The retention of the present small diffined sugar was urged, and the continua- about a 'snapping turtle. tion of the present color standard also was requested.

"Free sugar would open the United States markets to the importation of refined beet sugars from Europe, upon exactly the same terms as raw sugar.

This action was taken pending the filing of the government's answer to the plea of abatement entered by counsel for President Mellen, holding that the indictments found against himself, Mr. Chamberlin and Mr. Smithers were null and void.

In view of the fact that the same jury is conducting the present investigation the government attorneys decided today to devote their time to their argument opposing the plea of abatement.

MELROSE PARK WORK SHOWS GOOD PROGRESS MADE IN THE PAST YEAR

Preliminary Part Is Well Under Way in Project of Developing the Land in Ell Pond Vicinity

EXPERT TELLS PLAN

CONSIDERABLE progress by Melrose in street and park development the past year is shown in the third annual report of that city's board of park commissioners, just submitted to the mayor and the board of aldermen, special emphasis being laid upon what has been accomplished in the territory about Ell pond, work that largely centered the efforts of the commiss

The appropriation of $12,000 was made so late that only preliminary operations could be carried on last year, the plans submitted by Harlan P. Kelsey of Salem, Mass., being adopted and work started Division of the appropriation was made so that $7000 was devoted to acquiring and grading land on and near Tremont street and $5000 to the development of Ell Pond park. The board of park commissioners acquired from the Boardman estate approximately 21/4 acres, at a cost of $2000, and from R. J. Munn, trustee, approximately 11/4 acres, at a cost of $1500. The land acquired has been surveyed and laid out in accordance with the plans submitted in the first annual report of the board, providing for a baseball field at the north end of the tract. The work in Ell Pond park and vicinity has been in charge of Engineer Edward F. FitzGerald.

With the skating in winter and boating and other sports in summer it would seem that Ell Pond Park will be unusually fitted to really be what a park should be to the people; a park for use every day in the year. A naturalistic treatment is given both in the design and in the planting plans and native hardy material will be used almost exclusively. Bathing Pool

The result has been to clog the offices with non-mailable matter, and it is thought that to expedite it it may be necessary to allow this matter to be mailed with an explanation that parcel

Proven in Furs

Provided the very finest quality of merchandise is offered, the results of a sale will be measured only by the quantity of goods in it, that is, if you have the ambition to hold a large sale you must have the ambition to buy a large quantity of goods, and if you wish an immediate return the PRICE MUST BE AN INDUCEMENT ALSO.

This is demonstrated conclusively in Chandler & Co.'s GREAT SALE OF FURS.

These furs came from the very best furriers in the world and they are the most select qualities of all furs obtainable, and they are made in the best manner. They are the most fashionable models to be obtained, and further, it is the great quantity in the purchase that makes possible such great sales.

Think of buying by the hundred the most expensive, the most fashionable, of coats made from the most extravagantly fine furs,—and muffs and stoles by the thousands. It is actually selling at retail in a wholesale manner, and all these furs are at

SMART BLOUSE, EASY TO MAKE

Design pretty for all the washable silks

THIS illustration shows one of the most attractive blouses the season has produced. It combines a number of the smartest features and at the same time is easy to make. The long shoulder line, the broad collar, the vest and the lace frills are all fashionable. If the cuff's for the long sleeves are not liked, they can be omitted or the sleeves can be finished at the elbow with cuffs.

The small front view gives a pretty way of scalloping the edges when the frills are omitted.

In the large front view the blouse is made of white charmeuse with vest, collar and cuffs of brocaded satin and frills of lace. Crepe de chine, China silk and all the soft, washable silks seem espe cially pretty for this design.

The design is equally well suited to the costume and to the odd waist to be worn with the tailored suit, and it is adapted to small women as well as young girls.

For the medium size the blouse will require 21/4 yards of material 27, 13/4 yards 36 or 11/2 yards 44 inches wide with 1 yard of lace 9 inches wide for the frills and 34 yard 27 inches wide for the collar, cuffs and vest.

The pattern of the blouse (7704) is cut in sizes for misses of 16 and 18 years. It can be bought at any May Mantor agency, or will be sent by mail. Address 102 West Thirty-second street, New York, or Masonic Temple, Chicago.

There are a few rules laid down by the Japanese sphool which ought to be considered by any one who attempts simple compositions.

The principle on which the art is based in a representation of natural floral growth. The manner in which the arrangement springs from the surface of the flower bowl or vase and one little flower bowl of a cylinder box having circular ends about 2½ inches in diameter, says the New Orleans Picture of broade either si'' or cotton is used for covering the outside of the cylinder, while a circle of plain paper is pa ted to the bottom.

She never lets any sordid or unpleasant detail become so apparent that it is recognized as a discomfort. It is imperative, then, that the adventure in economy should be made agreeable to all the members of the family. For that reason the elimination of furniture should be attended by radical changes in the arrangement of each room. Why not anticipate the spring repairs? Now is an ideal time to procure workmen and a change of color scheme will be welcomed.

As one of the fundamentals in re ducing the cost of being clean is the employment of preventive methods. The housecleaning should be made the most of as a time to use putty on the windows to keep out dust, to apply paint that is light and therefore cannot be neglected in the weekly ministrations of the charwoman. How strange to replace dark paint, which does not show dust, for pale grays and cream whites! That will be the first thought, but economy in being clean means that there shall be constant thought of cleanliness and therefore the watchfulness which prevents neglect. That leads to education for reform, the last step, for when the rooms are all so bright and so dainty, so spacious and so attractive that each member will rejoice in them, lessons in avoiding careless habits will be the last step in the campaign to reduce the cost of being clean.

LONDON-The conference between the delegates from the Turkish empire and the Balkan states to discuss terms of peace has now had laid before it the Turkish counter-proposals to those of-fered by the Balkan league some time

For the purpose of comparison the proposals of the Balkan league may be summarized as follows: The abandon ment by the Turkish empire of all Turkey-in-Europe, with the exception of Constantinople and the vilayet of Adrianople, with a boundary stretching from Midia, on the Black sea, to Rodosto on the sea of Marmora. Turkey was to be allowed to retain the peninsula of Gallipoli, holding the Dardanelles forts as an isolated position, and she was also to retain the mosque of Selim II. at Adrianople. Turkey was to abandon all the Aegean islands now held by Greece and all claim to Crete. Albania was to be an autonomous state with boundaries to be subsequently deter-

The Balkan states did not state definitely that these proposals were a final statement of their claim, but simply put them forward as "principal proposals" which were obviously left open for debate. The Turkish reply, as was expected, is a demand for very much more than can possibly be conceded.

They are as follows: The boundary between Turkey and Bulgaria to remain speedway. It is a complete circle, three WASHINGTON TOWN practically as at present in the Thracian district, no territorial concession of importance being made, but an autonomous state of Macedonia to be created with Salonika as its capital, this state to remain under the suzerainty of Turkey; the Prince of Macedonia to be chosen from a neutral state by the Balkan states, subject to the approval of the Sultan, and preferably not to be a member of either the Roman Catholic church

Regarding the Aegean islands the state of things existing before the war to be restored. In particular, as regards Crete, it was affirmed by Turkey from 5000 acres of groves are packed, A. J. These proposals by Turkey when read by Reshid Pasha were received by the delegates with practically no comment in the way of debate. Dr. Daneff, for Bulgaria, simply declared that they could not be called counter-proposals in the strict sense of the word.

The allies, he said, had asked for territories, Turkey offered them reforms. The Turkish delegates seemed to have left out of account altogether the fact that there had been a war. If now they ALBANY TRIP CITED were back again in the month of September it would be natural for Turkey to offer reforms in the shape of auton omy to Macedonia and Albania, but since September there had been a war with far-reaching results. LONDON-The Balkan committee in "a considered statement" of its views on the future of the Aegean islands, which it is reported to have addressed to the peace delegates of the allied states and to the embassies of the great powers in London, declares that the committee reasserts its conviction that no solution of the question will be just or permanent which does not incorporate them in the kingdom of Greece. WOMEN TO SEEK HOME ECONOMICS CULTURAL VALUE

Plans of the household economics department of the General Federation of Women's Clubs for the next two years have been announced. They are twofold: First, to urge the study of textiles, more equitable schedule and a pure tex tile bill; second, to establish the cultural value of home economics. Miss Helen Louise Johnson of Watertown, N. Y., the new head of the department, says this has been regarded as related to cooking and serving only.

"Home economics in their economic and social forms should be taught in every girls' school and college in the country," she continues. "Household administration is the privilege of the woman. There are certain qualities number mailed was 260,204, and the total which need to be taught and preached in this game of housekeeping in order that we may show the object of it all, and stop focusing our attention on the means. Garments made in America are equal to those bought abroad, and as the 60 per cent duty charged on most imported lines is avoided on Americanmade garments, the latter meet with a much more ready sale.

It has been considered an unfortunate fact that, in spite of the high standard of work in American factories, the manufacturers are not style originators, for although they are entering this field, they still derend upon Paris to produce the ideas which they copy.

Before the trip abroad can be made long conferences are held between the buyer and the merchandise man. BALTIMORE & OHIO CONVERTIBLE BOND

An interesting feature of the new Baltimore & Ohio convertible bond issue is the fact that the issue price is a trifle below that of the stock, comparatively speaking. The bonds will cost stockholders 951/2, and being exchangeable at 110 for common stock, will make the equivalent price of the stock about 105. Inasmuch as the bonds will be immediately exchangeable, anything above 105 which the stock may advance will be an assured profit upon conversion. Western of $14,000,000 4s, convertible at par, at a time when the stock was selling at a premium of eight or ten points, is another recent example of a railroad convertible put out on terms to show an immediate profit on conversion. It will be recalled that the St. Paul 41/28 must do a five-year Marathon before they become a call on the stock, while the Atchison 4s of 1960, sold in 1910, will become convertible on June 1 next.

Baltimore & Ohio handles its convertible issue in a manner somewhat dissimilar from Atchison. Any strength in Baltimore & Ohio common may engender the desire to convert the whole is sue into stock, thus substituting a per cent for a 41/2 per cent charge. When the last issue of $44,000,000 Atchison 4 was put out, the common stock sold a 112, and in order to forestall the possi bility of wholesale conversion, the effeetive date was put forward to June 1, 1913. The 1906, 1907 and 1909 issues were convertible immediately upon their issuance and up to a certain specified date. At the time they were put out however, Atchison common was selling either below or close to par and the convertible feature had only the value of a call on the stock without immediate availability. Certain railroad convertible issues habitually sell a little higher than the stock into which they are exchangeable. It would seem that Baltimore & Ohio is about to join the group, for with the bonds at 981/s, at which price they sold last week on the New York curb, the stock equivalent is 108, as against an actual quotation of 106. Shrewd observers believe that on an investment basis solely Baltimore & Ohio convertible debentures are entitled to sell where they do, if St. Paul debentures bearing the same rate of interest, and with the conversion date 41/2 years away, can command a price of 106.

FRANCE INTERVENES TO PROTECT NATIVES OF GRAND-COMORE

Chamber Unanimously Acts When M. Augagneur Tells of Treatment Meted Out by Company to Islanders

(Special to the Monitor)

PARIS, France - No greater proof could be furnished of the great change that has taken place in the public mind in France with regard to colonial policy and administration than the debate which took place in the chamber recently during the session.

It is not very many years ago that the native population of the French colonies was regarded as more or less part of the goods and chattels of the colony, to be dealt with as such. Today it is well recognized that coercion, even if limited to a moral form, is unfruitful, and that the only way to make a colony valuable and prosperous is to adopt a policy that has for its base a just and equitable balance between the interests of the colony and those of the natives who inhabit it.

M. Augagneur, late Governor-General of Madagascar, in an interpellation of the colonial minister, raised the question of the present condition of the island of Grand-Comore, and roused the sympathies of the whole chamber in referring to the condition of the natives of this

Natives Dispossessed

After many varied experiences the company succeeded in 1897 in obtaining from the colonial minister a decree by which its titles and legal position were recognized and affirmed by the French government. This was followed by a definite policy on the part of the com pany to dispossess the natives of the land they occupied, and had possessed from time immemorial. Many difficulties ensued, and finally it was sought to maintain the authority of the company by an armed force.

The legal title of the company has been several times challenged in the courts, but always without success, the question having hitherto been surrounded with many complications. The chamber was much stirred when M. Augagneur after describing the history of the island PART OF LAYARD since it had been controlled by the company, added that in spite of their owning all the land they were giving employment to some 600 natives only, while all the rest were on the verge of starvation. The only alternative for the native was, he said, to remain in possession of his own land unlawfully, and even then the company were making preparations to dispossess him by the aid of military

Famous Old Book

The history of Caxton's Malory's "Morte d'Arthur" (of 1485) reads like a fable indeed. This volume, whose earliest sale price known was 2s. 6d., was bought by J. P. Morgan for $42,800. It is the only copy extant in a perfect condition, so the Bookman says. A page reproduced is signed with a final note in Latin meaning, "Caxton made me." The last paragraph reads: "Thus endeth thys noble joyous book entytled Ye Morte Notwythstondynge it treatheth of the . . . actes of the sayde kynge Arthur, of his noble knyhghtes of the depressing things of the sort. HISTORIC PENRHYN OLD HALL, WALES

INTERIOR OF THE GREAT HALL AT PENRHYN OLD HALL

NORTH WALES and the borderland are rich in archeological remains, but they are mostly in the way of ruined castles, relics of that medieval period when the English overlords erected them to subjugate the Welsh, those direct descendants of the ancient Britons, who remain today in many respects of language and characteristics, a race apart.

Of the few habitable medieval dwelling houses Penrhyn Old Hall, midway between Landudno and Colwyn bay, is a typical and particularly interesting example. It occupies a sequestered position at the foot of a rocky pass, along which the Romans formerly cut a roadway to their lead mines in the neighboring heights, known as the Great and Little Ormes.

Its rugged and rambling exterior encloses several apartments which retain so much of their original simplicity and charm that it is easy while there, to imagine the many stirring scenes which must have been enacted within its walls in the turbulent times of the common-

In the room above are some recently discovered fifteenth century frescoes, and the whole house is equipped, as in olden time, in ancient oak which reflects the glare of log fires burning in cavernous chimney places, within which one may look skyward.

There is a museum containing a unique collection of bardic and ancient Welsh relics and of prehistoric and Roman remains discovered in the caves with which these hillsides abound, and adjoining the ancient house which was built in 1422, is a still earlier chapel founded in the thirteenth century, a pilgrim's well, and Roman excava-

Achievement and Self-Denial

THAT some connection exists between the struggles and the achievements of genius experience proves, however we may dispute over the explanation. Most of the people who have stood before the world as illustrating the highest powers of humanity have worked their way to eminence in the face of difficulty. Doubtless what appears to those looking on as discouragement or privation was to these tireless workers a mere incident of the way. They were not thinking of material ease and pleasure. They were absorbed in great conceptions, in ideas. But they bore the fretting chain of narrow circumstance patiently, they did the humble duty of the moment faithfully. Their path was lightened by the glow of their inward life.-Mary Stanhope.

Newspaper Standards

The independent newspaper would no nore publish the speech of an incendiary than it would anything else that was . . . degrading, says Maurice Low in the Yale Review. It would give as little encouragement to the anarchist as it would to the mountebank in politics of society; it would show its contempt of the dishonest by silence. There are many newspapers that will not knowingly publish a fraudulent advertisement because of the injury it does to the public; yet the theft of a man's purse is a triffe compared with the corruption of his morals. If a rewspaper feels that it is required to censor its advertising columns so as to limit the opportunities for fraud, is not a higher duty imposed upon it to exercise the same strict supervision over its news columns and prevent a greater injury being done by permitting the dishonest to exploit themselves for personal profit at the cost of the public!

The shell is made in delicate sections like the sections of an orange, and it is as if ver, beautifully carved or engraved in tiny points on the outside, where the spines grow like porcupine quills. The saell is usually very brittle and is not polished but of a sandy texture. These shells are very numerous on the shores of Monterey bay in California, and the Japanese fishermen gather them by thousands and sell them to be made into dainty pincushions, jewel boxes and even into shell jewelry. These shells as found on the eastern coast are usually bleached gray or white but it is said that the California shells have a purplish color that is very lovely. It is one of the daintiest of the wonders of the ocean and may be picked up in sizes that range from the end of one's thumb to an orange.

Emphasizing the People's Rule

Woodrow Wilson's appraisal of Abraham Lincoln, made at Chicago in 1909, has new significance now that Mr. Wilson has been selected to follow the Illinoisan in the presidency. To the intrinsic merit of the oration is added a personal quality and prophetic note all the more rewarding to the reader because the orator, when he was analyzing the sources of the statesman's power and the characteristics of the great commoner, was speaking without the slightest thought that he himself soon was to be discovered and made a popular leader.

If this eulogy of Lincoln is read in the light of the Presidentelect's recent speeches at Staunton, Va., or in Chicago before the Commercial Club, or his talk to the Democratic electors of New Jersey, the question is likely to arise as to how far Lincoln is now serving as a model for his eulogist of 1909. There is no open assertion of discipleship, as in the case of Mr. Roosevelt. But many of the things that Lincoln was eulogized for doing, the President-elect already has begun to do. He praised Lincoln for a candor and honesty that at the same time were genial, for capacity to see and think for himself, for disregard of "caution, the confidential agent of selfishness," for ability to comment upon his own misfortunes with that touch of humor which implied detachment, and for his refusal to be tied up with the meshes of any theory. He'defined Lincoln's nearness to the people and his capacity to lead them as due not only to his rootage in the mass of men but chiefly because he spoke for their higher interests, because he was not "subdued by any stuff of life that he happened to work in and was free to move in any direction" toward which he was prompted. "Professional politicians had burrowed into particular burrows, and Mr. Lincoln walked on the surface and saw his fellowmen." Moreover, Lincoln was a man of the people who felt "that unspoken, that intense, that almost terrifying struggle of humanity, that struggle whose object is, not to get forms of government, not to realize particular formulas or to make for any definite goal, but simply to live and be free."

Candor, independence of thought and utterance, humor, refusal to outline specific legislative reforms while persistently reiterating great political and humanitarian ideals, and complete identification of himself with a popular cause that nothing can subordinate in his thought or affections—these are some of the characteristics of the next President, who by his recent speeches has made it impossible for any subordinate leader of his party or any champion of centralized political or financial power to remain in ignorance of his intentions toward men who exist for privilege.

ELECTIONS go by fractions so commonly that it is only relatively of consequence that but 45 per cent of the voters of Boston shared in the choice of members on the city council and one for the school committee, Tuesday, and that in the council election a surprise was furnished in the choice of one who has been a somewhat spectacular figure in recent politics. If the 64,000 voters who stayed away from the polls derive any amusement from the action of the 23,000 who named Mr. Watson for the council, they are entitled to it; but they are not entitled to make complaint. Mr. Watson appears to have been regularly elected; if the recount proves it, he will be entitled to the consideration which his important office carries with it. The council, as a small body charged with large responsibility, offers no such field for display as did its numerous predecessor; it can hardly fail to have a certain restraint upon an ebullient disposition; yet to Mr. Watson, through the very unexpectedness of his election, has come a special opportunity for honorable service to the community. It is for him to say whether this opportunity shall be used or wasted.

Perhaps the real test of the merit of the voting portion of the people was in the election of a member of the school committee. Here political and personal machinery brought its greatest force to bear and the election of Miss Curtis as the first woman to serve on the school committee in the reduced number required by the present charter seems to us distinctly in the direction of appreciation of merit in a candidate and of the need of keeping the schools out of politics, politics out of the schools and the educational interests of the city on a high level.

GOVERNOR SULZER ordered the Yonkers street car strike to come to an end, but if it has not yet ended this is not so much Governor Sulzer's fault as it is the fault of the laws that force the public to walk while public utility employers and public utility employees try to tire each other out.

Any passably good friend of the Democratic party could tell that party that it will be judged four years hence not by the investigations it carries on into what the Republicans have done, but by what it does in a constructive way itself.

New Move Against the Coal Combine IN A RECENT ruling of the United States supreme court, charges against a number of so-called minor combinations between coal mine and railway companies were dismissed without prejudice, because they were not properly incorporated in the government's original bill of complaint. This left the matter open to further action by the department of justice, and Attorney-General Wickersham, it is announced, has now decided to prosecute the combinations referred to. With this end in view, James C. McReynolds of New York, who was associated with counsel for the government in the anthracite trust suit, has been instructed to prepare the necessary bills and to begin proceedings.

Taken as a whole, the so-called minor companies seem to be factors fully as influential in the coal producing situation as the so-called principals. It is difficult to say in advance of the hearing whether they are branches of the main stem or the sources from which the trunk draws its sustenance; in any event, it appears to be the conviction of the government that the coal situation can never be cleared up to the satisfaction of the Sherman law or the people until the combine evil in coal production and transportation, root and branch, shall be destroyed.

Where the question of combines between mining and carrying companies has been brought squarely to an issue, the courts have held against them, as, for example, in the case of the Temple Iron Company. The corporations in such combines must be fully cognizant not only of the attitude toward them of the public and the government, but of the hopelessness of their case before the courts. Instead of bowing to what is manifestly the inevitable, however, they insist upon stubbornly resisting every move made against them. To say the least, this is most impolitic, especially at a time when the popular temper is in anything but a sympathetic mood toward the principle of monopolistic private ownership. It would be far wiser for the coal combines to dissolve voluntarily and get down to a sounder and a safer basis, without inviting the interposition of the courts and a consequent publicity that can only serve to weaken them still further in popular regard.

Social Phase of the Parcel Post In some parts and among certain industrial and mercantile interests of the United States the feeling has prevailed, ever since the parcel post came to be considered seriously, that its introduction would still further accelerate the tendency toward centralization, and it was because of this impression that many, even to the last, withheld from it their support. Since its installation, as yet in a small way, some fanciful speculators have pictured it as a means by which the farmer's wife may possess herself of the latest things in city styles, thereby keeping pace with her urban or metropolitan sister in all that appertains to the mode. People better acquainted with the American farmer's wife and her tastes, and manner of satisfying them, have never permitted considerations of this character to affect them. In a very large sense, the parcel post, in principle, is no new thing to the rural districts. The mail order business has been growing steadily in this country for the last twenty-five years, and while it has led to the establishment of great mail order houses, these institutions by no means monopolize the trade. Throughout the West it is no uncommon thing for the women of the small towns and of the farming communities to have regular accounts with the city dry goods and department stores.

So that the introduction of the parcel post, per se, will work no social revolution in the interior, in the sense of causing the women of the rural districts to seek in the large cities supplies they might otherwise purchase nearer home. A great many of them have not been purchasing near home, but it has not been so much their fault as it has been the inability of the small storekeeper to meet their wants. The parcel post will do for the country store what the regular freight and express services never have done for them. Such stores may now order from wholesalers small lots, from gloves to velvets, and have them delivered promptly and at low carrying cost. The charges on small lots need not hereafter eat up the profits. Under the new system the stores should be able to compete to better effect with the large city establishment and the mail order house. It will be a much simpler matter for them in the future to show the latest thing the big cities have to offer.

In other words, the parcel post will distribute rather than centralize. But it will work out in another respect in a still more gratifying manner. It will enable the farmer's wife to market her share of the farm products so much more expeditiously and cheaply that she will probably form regular business connections with the centers from which she will also draw her supplies. Socially, her position will be greatly strengthened, not, however, by leaning on the big cities, but by assisting, both as producer and consumer, in building up the trade of the small communities.

up the trade of the small communities

OF LATE years unusually little has been heard from or about Venezuela. But it has been the silence of reconstruction, not that of stagnation. President Juan Vicente Gomez's methods have not, to be sure, escaped vehement denunciation but he has succeeded in curbing the unruly elements of the country and in educating the people to the cultivation of a feeling of security. In a recent consular report from La Guaira, containing a commercial review of Venezuela this feeling of security from domestic disturbances is given as one of the chief sources of the increased prosperity of Venezuela in 1911.

Progress

in Venezuela

Some notable advances in industrial enterprises are recorded in the review, such as the improvements to the shipbuilding plant and repair docks at Puerto Cabello, work on a new cotton mill at Cumana, a hydro-electric plant to supply current to Caracas and La Guaira, plans for a new sugar enterprise near Lake Maracaibo, besides important extensions of existing industrial enterprises. What looks very promising in view of the future canal traffic is the petroleum concession recently granted to an American corporation covering a considerable part of the country. Immigration has been practically at a standstill for several years, the period of laborious reconstruction being recognized as little adapted for a vigorous campaign in that direction. There is today, however, every indication that the government will, in the near future, start on its long-delayed campaign for attracting desirable immigrants from Europe. Within the scope of these immigration plans comes a well-defined roadmaking project, embodied in several decrees just issued for the construction of new wagon roads. These will include one from Barcelona to Soledad, opposite Ciudad Bolivar on the Orinoco; another from Maturin, with its cattle resources, to Puerto Frances, where a new port is to be established, to facilitate export to Trinidad; and a third road from San Casimiro, Aragua, to Altagracia, Guarico, with several branches, some to be constructed, others to be thoroughly repaired, which will give access to an important agricultural district, once selected as one of the best in the republic for the establishment of colonies of immigrants.

Thanks to a marvelous diversity of climates and resources, Venezuela is in position to attract a variety of nationalities, and situated on the new highroad of the world's traffic, her opportunities will advertise themselves. When Venezuela breaks her silence it will be found that she has prepared earnestly for the Panama canal era.

A color scheme in new Parisian millinery shows a combination of red, violet, green and yellow. If hats trimmed in this manner are to be distributed by parcel post, Mr. Hitchcock is likely to become involved in a controversy with the anti-noise societies.

Controversy having arisen as to whether an American youth wishing to succeed would do well to choose engineering, a veteran educator who has known personally nearly a thousand graduates of the Stevens Institute of Technology, emerges to rell of the rewards, professional and pecuniary, that have come to a majority of the men who have received the degree of mechanical engineer. Professor Furman's detailed evidence does not surprise; it only confirms what must have been

Engineering and Its Rewards prise; it only confirms what must have been obvious to any discriminating observer of contemporary society. The greatest of presentday ventures from the economic and utilitarian standpoint are made possible only by having as administrative and constructive agents men who are masters of mechanical, electrical, mining and hydraulic engineering. The largest enterprises for reform and social uplift, formerly denounced as utopian but now seen to be thoroughly practical, having to do with all the latter-day necessities of urban centers and rural communities, can be carried through successfully only when the newer types of engineer are called in. It is not a limiting but an expansion of the field of engineering that the youth of today faces as he chooses his calling. Plotting of land areas, surveying of railway routes and mapping urban street systems naturally cannot be as much in demand in the United States of 1912 as in the pioneer days of a half century or century ago. But new forms of activity for the engineer come with the congestion of population, with new discoveries of investigators, with latter-day adventures of traders and builders in tropical and semi-tropical regions, with the vast public works carried on by governments, and with the rising ideals of community life. Standards of efficiency and love of truth for truth's sake, taught in the technical and engineering schools and accepted by their graduates, will make the latter especially desired by society as counselors and as administrators in the fight for efficiency in governmental administration that looms ahead.

So intimately does the engineer stand related to some of the largest and noblest of human enterprises at the present time that he is winning formal honors from monarchs and popular respect from democracies. Where once men talked of "civil engineering" they now begin to see the implications of "social engineering."

Anti-Militarist Victory in Japan SINCE Japan decided to assume the constitutional form of monarchy she has not undergone such a period of sharp division of opinion among national leaders as to state policy as closed with Prince Katsura's recent selection as head of the ministry succeeding Marquis Saionji. The record of the long period of negotiations with other proposed mediators between the warring military and commercial factions is one that discloses conditions in contemporary Japan far from promising to those persons who wish her peace and prosperity. Divisions exist among the elder statesmen. Sentiment favorable to party government is less in volume and weight than it used to be. The Diet and the constitution do not increase in prestige. State-controlled education favors training of obedient bureaucrats. A curbed press cannot educate and inform an independent electorate. National resources and credit are not equal to ambitious plans of the military caste.

How far Prince Katsura planned his return to power after all other proposed compromise candidates had proved to be unwilling or ineligible is not so important as that having taken up the reins at a time of crisis he has pledged himself to a pacific policy in the far east, to maintenance of present cordial relations with Great Britain and America, and to an attitude of good will toward China. What is more significant, however, if reports be true, is that on the issue of increase of the army by two divisions for use in Korea and on he continent, he has sided with civilians rather than with the professional warrior caste. The militarists led by Marshal Yamagata have met with a reverse. Discretion in matters of revenue and outgo has been deemed the better part of valor. Retrenchment is to be a military as well as an educational, transportation, public works and administrative watchword. The effect of this reverse on a party long dominant in national affairs has yet to be reported, but caused by Prince Katsura it will probably provoke less irritation than if it came from a premier less identified with the army in the past and farther removed from the throne.

WORKMEN engaged in the task of tearing down a New England house of a century's standing, or less, find an object lesson in the thoroughness of old-time construction which raises a question, at least, as to the stability and soundness of the prevailing way of building. Just now in Springfield, a house of much less than a century in age, built by Chester W. Chapin for his own residence, is resisting the efforts at demolition in a way that puts to shame the modern housebuilder.

When Houses Were Well Built that puts to shame the modern housebuilder. Against its brick walls are found to have been placed studs three by four inches in dimensions, but twelve inches apart and firmly held in place by handwrought nails, the most unpullable nails ever made. Heavy timbers, forming the floor support, were not only held together by mortise and tenon and wooden pegs but were made solid by long iron spikes. Beams of spruce, eight by ten inches, and sixty feet long, spanned the space from the brick pillars of the portico to the rear of the house and supported the cupola, whereof the joints not only had the strength of the others in the frame but were reinforced by heavy bolts two feet long. It took six men on a rope to wrench these uprights loose. The items speak for the stability of the housebuilding of the man of whom the Springfield Republican says that he knew how to build houses as well as railroads, referring to Mr. Chapin's share in the pioneer enterprise of the state, the Albany railroad.

The stability of the generations past expressed itself in the manner of their house building. It brings an added respect for them in the days when their work is studied as an object of historic interest or when demolition becomes necessary in the march of progress, a march for which it can hardly be claimed that it is building with the strength, the honesty, and the permanency that marked the old-time, use of materials. Judging the character of the later generation in comparison with the older, what is to be thought of us by the investigator of a half or full century later, assuming that there will be evidence then of the work of our time?
